Rev. Powell Charges Beckham With Insincerity.

Senator McCreary on his arrival at Benton, Ky., on Tuesday afternoon from Murray was met at the depot by about four hundred ex-Confederate soldiers, a brass band and a large delegation of citizens of Benton and Marshall county. Proceeded by the band, the crowd marched to the court house, with the old soldiers as escorts. Senator McCreary was greeted by one of the finest audiences ever assembled in Benton. A few ladies were present but the majority were representative Democrats and farmers.

The Senator spoke for about an hour and a half. His speech was along the same line as heretofore, except that he read an extract from a letter written by the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, to the Rev. H. D. C. MacLachlin, of Shelbyville, Ky., dated October 5, 1906, which created quite a sensation.

Senator McCreary said that Dr. Powell authorized the Rev. Dr. MacLachlin to deliver the letter. The extract is as follows: "I cannot bring myself to vote for Beckham in view of all the facts that have come to me. The man has not been square. I do not think that the temperance people are called upon to permit themselves to be played with by an insincere man."

Peabody Before Prewitt.

Before State Insurance Commissioner Prewitt, of Frankfort, Tuesday, President Charles A. Peabody, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, appeared and answered charges against his administration resulting from the recent dismissal of Col. Biscoe Hindman as agent for Kentucky. He defended the removal of the latter by stating that no agent could represent the company in getting new business and at the same time be hostile to its management. Col. Hindman and another deposed agent took the stand and gave the other side of the matter. Commissioner Prewitt will receive the stenographic report of the testimony, and stated that he would make a prompt announcement of his ruling in the matter.

Had 3 Wives and 20 Children.

James Arnold, a resident of Newkirk, Pa., is 56 years old, has been married three times and is the father of 20 children. His youngest child, a daughter, is only a few days old. His first wife was ten years older than he, his second ten years younger and the third is 20 years his junior. His domestic life has been calm and placid.

Increase in Receipts at Paris Postoffice.

Postmaster J. L. Earlywine informs us that the Paris postoffice was showing a healthy increase in all departments. For the quarter ending September 30, the total receipts were $3,024.42. Compared with the same period of 1905 when the receipts were $2,740.07, the amount of net increase is shown to be $284.35.

Mr. Earlywine said the above figures did not show the real volume of business as is always indicated by the sale of stamps, which for the past quarter was $502 greater than for the same period of last year, as the receipts for box rents decreased $225 owing to the installation of the free delivery system in all parts of the city. The number of money order issued for the quarter ending September 30 was 1,276, while 573 registered letters and packages were issued.

I. O. O. F. Anniversary.

Bourbon Lodge No. 23, I. O. O. F., will celebrate the sixty-first anniversary of its institution on Monday night, November 26.

Rev. J. L. Clarke, of Cynthiana, and Hon. W. C. G. Hobbs, of Lexington, Grand Master of the State, will deliver addresses on the occasion.

After the addresses lunch will be served at Croisdale's cafe. Every member is requested and expected to be present at this meeting.

Walsh to Pay Debts.

John R. Walsh, of Chicago, whose financial failure led to the closing of the Chicago National bank, the Home Savings bank and the Equitable Trust company, all of Chicago, has made a business deal, which he thinks will pay off his remaining indebtedness of $7,000,000 and enable him to recover $10,000,000 or more of his fortune. Buying railroads and buying quarries and coal lands caused Walsh's failure.

Walsh's plan is to build 40 miles of railroad, the Chicago Southern, and obtain the terminal privileges in Chicago. The deal has been made possible by the finding of a market for $5,500,000 in Chicago & Southern five per cent. gold bonds.

Arrested For Murder.

Following a thorough investigation by the Fayette county grand jury, which resulted in an indictment for murder being returned against him, Fred Pharris, a former attendant of the Eastern Kentucky Asylum, was arrested on a bench warrant Tuesday morning by Deputy Sheriff Ben Freckman, charged with the murder of Fred Ketterer, the Ashland, Ky., patient, who died at the asylum June 22 last, as the result of alleged cruel treatment by Pharris. Pharris is now in the Fayette county jail.

Got What She Wanted.

Notwithstanding the flurry about the packing-houses and a few other questions of National importance, the Rate Bill is always a topic of conversation here, says The New York Herald.

They were talking about it in the lobby of the House. "Well," said Representative Fred Landis, "I guess the President got about what he wanted."

"Sure," replied Representative Garfield. "He got what he wanted the way the girl did who was traveling in Mexico. She could not speak Spanish and she wanted some milk. She could not make the waiter understand, so she drew a picture of a cow on a piece of paper. The waiter understood then. He bought her a ticket to a bull fight."

Deceiving the People.

Speaker Cannon is deceiving the Republican voters by declaring in his stump speeches that the agricultural prosperity due entirely to the protective tariff. This leads the Kansas City Star to declare that what the people of Missouri cannot understand is why the blessings of the Republican stand-pat doctrine have worked so unequally in the several countries. What the Missouri farmers would like to know is why the protective tariff has brought bountiful harvests to the rich alluvial counties along the Missouri river and to those of the midland prairies, while it has done little or nothing for the rocky, hilly counties of the Ozarks. A point which adds to the confusion is that the rich counties of good crops are almost all democratic, while the poor counties that cannot raise anything better than Ben Davis apples are almost without exception Republican. If there had to be discrimination, it would seem that the Republicans would be the beneficiaries.

Of course, before Mr. Cannon made his speech in Kansas City it would have argued that the rich alluvial farms produced good crops just because they were fertile, and the mountain counties were distinguished for nothing in particular—not even, in many instances, for Ben Davis apples—for the very reason that they were hilly and rocky. But "Uncle Joe" says that the tariff makes the farmers prosperous, and so, since soil and rain and sun and climate have nothing to do with it, the problem must remain forever unsolved—unless it is explained as being another instance of the way the protective policy confers benefits on some and imposes burdens on others.

Facts Are Facts.

The editor of the Concordia, Mo., Empire, a Republican sheet, is one Republican who gives out a few facts. He says:

"We have been invited to send a dollar contribution to the Republican campaign fund that is being raised by popular subscription and to which President Roosevelt recently subscribed. We would like to have our dollar in such select company all right, but we've done all the contributing we intend to do this year. We have recently completed building a house at a cost of something over $4,000, and for every foot of lumber, every pane of glass, every sack of cement, every pound of nails, and in fact nearly every bit of material that went into it we made a good, liberal contribution thru the trusts that control them, and we guess we have done our share. It may be treason for a Republican newspaper to talk this way, but facts are facts, and it sort of relieves our conscience to tell the truth about the trusts once in a while. We'll just let the several trusts to which we have had to pay unwilling tribute in the past year pay our dollar for us. We need it and they don't."

He Means Business.

State Treasurer Berry, of Pennsylvania, is giving the Republican machine of that State a much-needed lesson. Berry is a Democrat, but he is supported by the Philadelphia Press, and the Lincoln Republicans, as well as the Democratic party. He is sifting the charges of extravagance and graft in the building of the new Capitol to the very bottom. He has exposed much fraud and corruption and has called upon Attorney-General Carson to prosecute the Pennypacker Board of Public Buildings and Grounds and demand an accounting. President Roosevelt may plead for the grafters, but he can't save them. Berry means business.

Easy to Decide.

Every Democrat in Kentucky we take it has pride enough to want to see our great State represented in the United States Senate by a man whom we will all be proud, and it shouldn't be hard for any man who loves his State, its name and fame, to decide how to cast his vote in the primary on November 6.
Two candidates seek the honor—McCreary, a man, tried and not found wanting; Beckham, a weakling of a boy. The former a statesman, the latter a political trickster, owned soul and body by one P. Haley.

He Has Never Produced Records.

Governor Beckham has been saying in his speeches that he intended to deal in facts and show by the records of the State what he and Percy Haley have done, but up to this time he has never produced the records. He has fooled the people so many times that we believe he actually imagines he can fool them all the time. We wonder if the records would help his cause? We should say most emphatically, No!

An Insult to the Voters.

The Harrodsburg Democrat says: "Governor Beckham's statement, made in his speech at Henderson last Saturday, that he could silence all opposition to himself if he had offices enough to go around, was at once a falsehood and an insult to the voters of Kentucky. The Governor and Percy Haley have built up their political machine on the theory that every man can be bought if one has the price, and they seem to have no higher conception of politics or decency. And that is just why the people intend to 'bust 'em.'"

A Public Enemy.

The coffee trust has entered into a deal with the Brazilian government to raise the price of coffee to American consumers. When an American corporation can enter into an alliance or treaty with a foreign government with the design of pillaging the American people, it is time to exterminate such a corporation, as a public enemy.

Extravagant Americans.

It is estimated that 150,000 Americans went abroad this year, and that they spent in the neighborhood of $200,000,000—more than enough money than is needed to build the Panama Canal. For one-fourth the money they could have one through the Rockies and Yellowstone Park and found wonders far surpassing anything to be seen in the Old World.

The Laborers of Servia.

Servia's laborer is at heart a simple, prosaic fellow. His attire is coarse almost to the point of ungainliness—rough brown trousers of homespun, a coat a shade or two darker and edged with a strip of black fleece; a peaked woolen cap and a cane, and you have the picture. He is a farmer on a small scale, and his hobby is raising hogs, which he turns into the forests or fields to fatten on mast. The rural life in Servia is primitive. At sunup folks rise, take their raki, or schnapps, and go to the fields to work. Their meal is brought to them at noon and again in the evening, for they often work until sunset. And so life goes on and on. Across the bluffs that border the river a road runs parallel with the Danube, and here workmen are seen, dressed often in white suits with red girdles, striving to bring from the earth the grain that will not come. In Rumania and Bulgaria the grain lands are rich, but here the earth seems stubborn and unproductive. So the laborer ekes out his existence as he may—the least interesting of all the laborers of southern Europe.

The Swiss Fourth of July.

Aug. 1 is the Swiss Fourth of July, the national fête day. A traveler tells how he helped to celebrate it one year at one of the climbing centers in the Valais by eating the sumptuous dinner provided by the hotel without extra charge, applauding the fireworks display and a bonfire lighted high on the mountain side and shouting "Hourra!" at the end of a patriotic speech extolling the ancient military glories and present republican democracy of Switzerland. Next morning came the strange sequel. The orator of the occasion, the most distinguished native visitor in the place, was appealed to as one who would certainly know the name of the Swiss president, but even he could not remember it. Nobody ever can. The name of that unassuming functionary is always less familiar in Switzerland than that of the lieutenant governor is in Illinois. He is merely the democracy's temporary official.

Jail Born Books.

Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" is the most famous and of its class incomparably the best English book ever written in prison. Bunyan was a prisoner in Bedford jail from 1660 to 1672 and in addition to his immortal allegory wrote "Grace Abounding" and "The Holy City" during those twelve years. Raleigh, who was a prisoner in the tower, 1603-14, occupied seven years of his captivity in writing his "History of the World." "The King's Quair," a long and romantic love poem, was written by James I. of Scotland when in prison at Windsor castle in 1423. Smollett, during his three months' detention in the King's Bench Prison for libel, wrote "The Adventures of Sir Launcelot Graves," and during a similar experience at Newgate in 1703 Defoe wrote a "Collection of Casualties and Disasters."

Naps and the Health.

Prolonged "forty winks" during the day are severely condemned by many doctors on the ground that they affect one's regular sleep. Scientists have found that in the ordinary course in the human being there is the greatest vitality between 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. and the least between 2 o'clock and 6 o'clock in the morning. Long sleeps during the day interfere with this order of nature and sometimes affect various organs, causing headache. The nap of forty winks, but only forty, proves refreshing to many because it is too short to have any injurious consequences.—London Telegraph.

Milk in Turkey.

In Turkey there is a great consumption of the milk of the buffalo, the common cow, the goat and the ewe, but it is hardly ever used in a natural state. According to a paper read at the London Academy of Medicine, the milk is considerably reduced. After slow cooling the milk is treated with a ferment taken from the previous day's supply. In a few hours a curd forms, which is called yaghom. The preparation is preferred to milk, and it has a pleasant, clean, acid taste and is of course nutritious.

Calumet.

"Calumet," supposed to be an Indian word meaning "pipe of peace," was wholly unknown among the savages. It is Norman and signifies in general a pipe. The pipe of peace was a "ganowadoc" among the Iroquois and a "pagan" among some other tribes. The Algonquins called it "pagan," the Winnebagoes "tahnoboo" and the Dakota "chandinoo."—Argonaut.

The Gulf Stream.

Western Europe's climate would be changed entirely were the isthmus of Panama and adjacent territory to be submerged, for in that case the equatorial current would be carried into the Pacific ocean, and the gulf stream, which does so much to warm Europe, would not emerge into the Atlantic.

Watch Jewels.

A jeweler, no matter how dishonest, would not steal the jewels in a watch, for they are valueless. They cost only 50 cents apiece. In antique watches the jewels were often costly. In modern watches they are never worth more than $15 a gross.—Argonaut.

Saluting a Ghost.

A famous Scotch dean used to tell a ghost story the clew to which is in the question, "Weel, malster ghast, is this a general rising or are ye just taking a daunter frae yer grave by yerself?"

Inconsistency with ourselves is the greatest weakness of human nature.—Addison.

Sun Baths.

Sun baths cost nothing and are the most refreshing, life giving baths that one can take, whether sick or well. Every housekeeper knows the necessity of giving her woollens the benefit of the sun from time to time, and especially after a long rainy season or a long absence of the sun. Many will think of the injury their clothes are liable to from dampness who will never reflect that an occasional exposure of their own bodies to the sunlight is equally necessary to their own health. The sun baths do not cost anything, and that is a misfortune, for people are still deluded with the idea that those things only can be good or useful which cost money. Let it not be forgotten that three of God's most beneficent gifts to man (three things most necessary to good health), sunlight, fresh air and water, are free to all. You can have them in abundance, without money and without price, if you will. If you would enjoy good health then see to it that you are supplied with pure air to breathe all the time, that you bathe for an hour or so in the sunlight and that you drink plenty of pure water.—Pittsburg Press.

The Voltaire of the East.

Omar Khayyam was a famous Persian poet and mathematician in the twelfth century, who was employed by the Sultan Malik Shah in revising the astronomical tables and in making a thorough reform of the calendar. He is better known to us as the writer of some 500 epigrams in verses of four lines which are unsurpassed in their pure diction, fine wit and crushing satire. These clever and fascinating quatrains were put into English by Edward Fitzgerald, who in 1859 published "The Rubaiyat of Omar," a rendering marked by exquisite melodiousness and by poetic insight and power. Omar has been called the Voltaire of the east because of his brilliant and pungent wit, while his depth of tenderness and profound thought and his denunciation of the fate which dooms to decay and death what is best and most beautiful in the world reveals much that reminds one of Byron, Swinburne and sometimes Schopenhauer.

Crystal Sky Columns.

An explanation of a curious optical phenomenon, sometimes witnessed on frosty nights, which is called the "pseudo aurora," is offered by a scientist. The phenomenon takes the form of beautiful columns of silvery light standing over electric arc lamps and other bright lights and sometimes appearing almost to reach the zenith. The scientist says that sometimes the evening star has a bright shaft below as well as above, while the rising moon stands in a broad column of light. These appearances are due to floating frost crystals which keep their reflecting faces horizontal. On examination he found that the crystals concerned in the exhibition were thin six sided plates of ice, never more than one millimeter in diameter. When the wind blows, these little plates are upset, and the columns of light caused by reflection from their surfaces disappear.

Greatest of All Cacti.

The greatest as well as the commonest of all cacti is the "soap weed," which grows wherever cacti grow and which is man's only friend in the great southwestern deserts of the United States and in Mexico. It furnishes always a quantity of water when cut. As its name indicates, it can be manufactured into a soap, perhaps the least alkaline soap ever made, even though the weed itself may grow in the center of an alkali desert. Beer is brewed from it, the Indians make a hemlock fiber from it, and horses and men can eat parts of it if the spines are cut away; also when it shoots up its one great arm skyward it tops that arm with one of the most gorgeous flowers in the world.—Argonaut.

New England Arguments.

To argue is as necessary to a New Englander as to eat and to sleep. By nature he rejoices in the opposite side of every question, and he prefers broad, general questions of which he knows only what the daily paper tells him. If he is alone he will argue with himself, and often he will prove to himself that he is wrong and that the argument by which he proves it is faulty.—From "The Balance of Power," by Arthur Goodrich.

Information for the Young.

"Pa, what do they call babies where there's three of them at a time—I mean the same as twins?"

"Triplets."

"Oh, yes. I couldn't think what it was. And what is it when there's four of them?"

"A calamity. Now, put that pup out of the house and keep him out or I'll send for the dog catcher!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Splendid Gain.

Hobson—How did you enjoy your summer trip, Bagley? Bagley—Had a delightful time; gained 130 pounds. Hobson—One hundred and thirty pounds! I don't believe it! Bagley—Don't you? Well, here it comes down the street. Just wait a moment, and I'll introduce you.

Overheard in the Art Gallery.

They were making the usual round of exhibitions. "Oh," he exclaimed, "do look at that beautiful Apollon Belvedere!" "Sh!" she returned. "Don't say 'dear' so loud. Everybody'll know we're just married."—Judge.

Not Finding Fault.

"So you never find fault with your wife's cooking?"

"I should say not," answered Mr. Meekton. "When my wife condescends to cook I say everything I can to encourage her."—Washington Star.

POLICE OF PARIS.

How the Third Brigade Spies Upon the Whole Force.

Vance Thompson describes in Everybody's the famous Third brigade of the Paris police, whose business is to supervise the police. It is composed of an officer de paix, a principal inspector, a brigadier, five subbrigadiers and about seventy-five picked men. About half are assigned to watch the patrolmen. He is a bold policeman who commits any of the little sins dear to the patrolman's heart. There is hardly a chance that he will not be detected in time. Reprimand follows, after that time and lastly dismissal. There is always a long "waiting list" of candidates, sound young fellows fresh from the army, and the city can choose its new servants among the best.

The other half of the Third brigade is engaged in work of a more typically Lathi kind. It investigates all complaints made against the patrolmen by chiefs and citizens, and it maintains a regular system of espionage upon the private lives of all policemen.

"This, of course, is the Latin way of doing things," writes Mr. Thompson. "Wrong as it may be in principle, it serves to weed out the men of bad character and bad habits and bad associations, and it prevents that monstrous alliance of the police and the lawbreakers."

The Third brigade in turn is watched by a smaller body of detectives, who report directly to the prefect of police.

DESERT THIRST.

Its Five Phases, Two of Which Mean Certain Death.

Half of the people dying from desert thirst perish in thirty-six hours, a quarter within forty-eight or fifty hours and all others of which the history is known within eighty hours.

The phenomenon of desert thirst may be arranged in three stages—namely, normal thirst, functional derangement and structural degeneration. These three stages are made up of five phases—the clamorous, cotton mouth phase, the shriveled tongue, the blood sweat and the living death. There is hope in saving the lives of the victims whose thirst is diagnosed in the first three phases, but for the fourth and fifth death is certain.

The clamorous phase of desert thirst may be relieved by water, or in some instances fruit acids or similar substances. The second, or cotton mouth, phase should be treated by giving the victim quarts of water taken in small sips and flooding his body. Practically the same treatment may be applied to the third, or shriveled tongue, phase, with the addition of a medicine to counteract the fever and a tonic for the heart. Water would only prove a damage in the fourth, or blood sweat, phase, and even if it were possible to satisfy the thirst of the victim his mental condition would never be clear. Death from thirst is often painless.—Los Angeles Times.

The Valley of Quillota.

"Whoever," says Charles Darwin in his "Voyage of the Beagle," "called Valparaiso the valley of paradise must have been thinking of Quillota." Quillota is a thriving town twenty-six miles from Valparaiso in a northeastern direction. Any person, he declares, who sees only the country around Valparaiso, barren of vegetation, would never imagine that there were such picturesque spots in Chile. "As soon as we reached the brow of the sierra the valley of Quillota was immediately under our feet. The prospect was one of remarkable natural luxuriance. The valley is very broad and quite flat and is thus easily irrigated in all parts. The little square gardens are crowded with orange and olive trees and every sort of vegetable."

According to Contract.

A man who was very miserly hoarded up his stacks of hay year after year in the hope of making double the price he was offered for them. A well known day asked the price of a stack. An enormous price was asked, which the buyer accepted.

"How about the terms of settlement?" asked the old miser.

"Well, you see," said the buyer, "my terms are to settle when I fetch the last load away."

"That's a bargain," said the miser, clapping the other's hand. The old chap watched every load go away except the last, and that the buyer never did fetch away.—London Standard.

No Salute for a Dirty Prince.

The crown prince of Germany had as a child a great dislike of being washed. The emperor tried various means to cure him, and he at last hit on the right one. The young prince came running to him one day in a great rage, saying the sentry had not saluted him as he passed.

"To be sure," said the emperor. "I gave orders they were not to salute a dirty prince, but only a clean one." The child's pride was hurt, and he took to the bath.

He Must Have Had Faith.

The church was packed, even the aisles lined with chairs. Just before the benediction the thoughtful clergyman, who loved order as he did the gospel, thus admonished his hearers: "In passing out please remain seated until the ushers have removed the chairs from the aisles."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Man often feels himself independent of all the earth, but let the sunshine and rain fall for a little while and he realizes how meekly dependent he is.—Salsburg Democrat.

Love Is Enough

By O. R. PHELPS

Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Suttcliffe

"Shut your eyes tight while I tell you a story," Alwyn commanded. "It begins as stories ought always to begin. 'Once upon a time'—"

"Dear me! I know I shan't like it. Those 'once upon a time' things have grown to be such a bore!" Lolita murmured plaintively, but without in the least checking the story teller.

He ran on, his eyes fixed high above her head. "A foolish fellow, foolishly than the common, set himself to hate wisdom, whose other name is woman!"

"He got his come-uppance, of course. They always do in stories, never out of them," Lolita interjected dispassionately.

This time Alwyn laughed. "Whose other name is woman—woman," he repeated with all the emphasis of capitals. "But you're dead wrong. He got no come-uppance. It was rather his ill luck to come down very hard—so hard he groveled in the dust when one particular woman looked him over without seeing him. That has happened, let me see, about three times a day for full six weeks. Result?"

"One hundred and twenty-six grovels, if your figures can be trusted. I doubt it. I doubt, indeed, if there is anything trustworthy about you," Lolita flashed at him, with a smile so coyly engaging it took all the slug from her speech. "Suppose you stop being tiresome," she went on. "I don't ask you to be sensible, I'm so far from sensible myself. But let's get away from the eternal me. There must be such lots of things better worth while."

"What will you have? Shall I discourse on 'ships and shoes and sealing wax and cabbagees and klags'?" Alwyn asked, his voice subsistive enough, but dancing rebellion in his eyes.

Lolita smiled demurely. "I think," she said, with an air of grave reflection, "if you don't mind, I had rather hear things about Gordon Fleming."

"There's nothing I can tell you—he's so openly, so offensively, so disgustingly rich—and so patiently in love with you," Alwyn burst out.

Lolita gave him a sideways look. "Are you sure?" she murmured. "Don't you see it would be cruel to experiment with my credulity?"

"As cruel as your experiments with my affection?" Alwyn flung back at her, trying to speak tragically, but laughing in spite of himself. What a rogue she was to play with him so. She loved him almost as he loved her. It had been instantaneous—they had hardly more than looked at each other when eye spoke to eye, heart to heart. But she had doubted him daintily all those, thereby making him more than ever captive. And he in turn had teased and vexed her, now with exaggerated and open devotion, now with reproofs for wholly imaginary faults. Really he did not think she could own a fault—she seemed to him perfect and altogether lovely. But in spite of his overcoming, he had wit enough to see that time and abject devotion would never suit her—he must show himself a man of spirit and temper else he would be no man for her.

It was ten days since they had come together at the Glenwald house party, ten blissful days of Lolita and love. Incidentally there had been walks, rides, drives, golfing and moonlit wanderings. Mrs. Arklow, Glenwald's chateaufort, had looked on in smiling approval. Lolita had but a scant fortune, and Alwyn, though not overrich, was clearly at the beginning of a great career. Were not the Flemings, father and son, behind him, the Flemings who had millions in hand and the potentiality of other millions in their mere approval? Gordon Fleming, the son, was well in the middle age; he had married very early—as had his father before him—but it had turned out very badly. In a year there had been a separation, later the threat of divorce, but fate stepped in to save the family pride. The wife sailed away on a ship that went down at sea. She had not been heard of in the fifteen years since, so it was safely assumed that she was among the lost. None of the few survivors had any knowledge of her; she was, moreover, so slight and frail she could hardly have lived through the terror.

Morally and legally her husband was free—to love, to woo, to marry, if he chose. So far he had not chosen. Indeed until Lolita came in his way women had been to him as shadows—shadows which must be well and tenderly used, but given no further thought. Her freshness, her unspoiled fairness, her simple natural charm, had swept him off his feet as completely as they had bowled over Alwyn. At first he had seemed to see how the land lay between the pair and contented himself with standing aside to watch their delight in each other. But for three days past he had shown a disposition to enter the lists—a disposition which roused in Alwyn rather pity than apprehension. Lolita knew—that was his sure hope—knew what it was to love, to be loved. All Fleming's millions were no offset to the knowledge. Still, it did no harm to make believe he was in fear of them.

Lolita looked at him in silence for a minute, her face the while subtly changing. It smiled still, but with no mirth in the smile, and the dimples and curves somehow shaped themselves to deeper lines. At last she said abruptly: "Don't you see I love to marry him? If I don't, I shall marry you, and that will be your ruin. Don't interrupt. must say it all at once—I have no promised, but that's how it will end. Last night I had a letter, a home letter. You know we're desperately poor folk, which is much worse than being poor outright. Mother has heard how things are. That made her tell me things—things I had never guessed—debts, privations, humiliations she had endured to make me what I am, some thing to retrieve our fortunes. Mr. Fleming has written asking her leave to court me. She gave it, of course, in her own dignified, diplomatic way. I am free to choose. If I choose to take him the choice will meet her approval. Oh, I know it all by heart!"

"I know by heart you are not going to do it. You can't," Alwyn broke in, his face gray and lined. Lolita looked away from him, shaking her head. But after a minute she sprang up, saying, with a laugh that was half a sob: "Come, I want one more walk—down past the dovecot. And while we walk we won't talk or think of things."

"Least of all Gordon Fleming," Alwyn said, taking her hand. But somehow it proved easier to say than to do. By the time they came opposite the dovecot Fleming's name had been many times on their lips.

The dovecot was a detached cottage set thickly about with trees and flowering shrubs and so stately hedged passively got but glimpses of the interior. The house was smothered in vines, and either upon the piazza or in a small sunny lawn space upon clear days there appeared a wheel chair with a helpless man in it and a woman, slight and frail, hovering about him. Today she was invisible, although the chair stood in its usual place. Sight of it, thus desolate, somehow hushed the pair who waited outside. A feeling of something imminent fell upon them. It was hardly a surprise to find the woman herself standing with the gate half open or to have her beckon them inside.

"I heard what you were saying—you two—I could not help it—there in the raspberry thicket," she said abruptly; then, her eyes fast on Lolita's face, "And I had to call you in—because—because I am Gordon Fleming's wife—and I couldn't see you, so young, so fresh, make a bitter mistake."

"His wife?" Alwyn echoed, with staring eyes. "Why, his wife has been at the bottom of the sea this long, long time."

"So he believes; so he must always believe," the woman said huskily, with a backward glance at the sleeping occupant of the chair. "I should be there if I had gone on that ship, but I didn't sail; I was not strong enough. Listen, I married without love, and I did love somebody else, yet that was not what made the break. I never saw the man I loved until it was all over with my husband. Gordon is a good man, but we did not suit. He is unyielding. If you do not bend to him you must break. And I was impatient and quick spoken and young and unhappy. He could not understand my unhappiness when he had given me so much. He gave me everything but liberty to enjoy it in my own way. If I had not left him I should have killed myself. That might have been better, yet I can't be sorry when I look there."

As she spoke she waved her hand toward the sleeper. "He would have nothing, nobody, if I had died," she murmured, her voice breaking from its tense hardness. "I was going away to escape him. Then at the very last I heard that he had been so hurt he would never walk again. I went to him at once. I have been with him ever since. The ship went down. It seemed the only kindness, the best return I could make Gordon, to let him think I was among the lost. I should never have spoken to any one in any other case. Don't, don't," laying a light and withered hand timidly on Lolita's arm, "let anything make you go against your heart. There are women made to be battered. You are not of them. Believe me, I am happier here—nurse, drudge, sole stay of a human wreck—than was or would be the mistress of millions with a dead heart in my breast."

Alwyn bared his head. Lolita drew the wasted face to her breast and held it there while her tears rained down upon it. "How can I thank you for saving me?" she whispered at last.

The woman gently loosed herself from the girl's clasp and pointed toward the gate. "Go and forget that you came in and all things save one," she said. "But remember love is enough and only love!"

The Gray Parrot.

The home of the gray parrot, an interesting but sadly ill used creature, is in sunny central Africa, from the Congo and Guinea coast to the east of Lake Nyassa. Here the "pretty Pollys" fly in flocks, as rooks and pigeons do in England, for they are very friendly birds. The birds when caught are huddled together and carried to the coast. Such as are still alive on reaching it are packed, generally without mercy or pity, in the holds of ships or are stowed away in any corner or board where space can be found, to suffer torments from want of air, want of light, want of proper food and space to spread their wings, and, worst of all, lack of water, which they dearly love. The wings of many wretched, suffering birds brought to this country are tied so as to prevent them from fluttering and spoiling their beauty. Choking, gasping, stifling from heat or shivering with damp and cold, hundreds upon hundreds die on their way to this country. It has been said by a famous bird fancier that hardly one in a thousand survives the terrible sufferings which gray parrots undergo on their way from their own land to the cage in England.—Our Animal Kingdom.

Every Day Heroism.

All the heroes do not die on the red field of battle or brave its dangers and survive them. On railroads, in mines, in battle with the flames, on high buildings, on telegraph and telephone poles, in plague-stricken communities in a thousand ways and places, there are unsung heroes and heroines who brave danger or meet death with brave hearts and uncomplaining lips in the everyday work and drudgery of existence. Laboring to live, living to labor, and withal to perform unflinchingly the obligations that in some form or other rests upon us all.

There are heroes, too, heroines also, who hear griefs and burdens in forns and shapes the world does not see and which they bear in silence, often cheerfully. There are trials and losses and burdens and impositions, and worries and appreciations and hardships, and griefs and sorrows, in the family and in the individual life that the spirit of pride, or modesty or independence or that fine something which shuns exposure of personal troubles or self-sacrifice and prevents parade of private affairs, even though they reveal heroic virtues. We note the weakness of those about us and become impatient with the faults and follies of our friends, forgetting our own. But in the proper light their virtues shine like stars in the night. Too often the word of commendation or appreciation we would utter, which we mean to say, we withhold until it is too late.—Nashville American.

PRACTICAL PICTURES.

Odd Parlor Ornaments and a Very Substantial Dinner.

There is a practical minded millionaire who has invented a substitute for valuable pictures which it is hoped will not commend itself to others. He has had a large number of bank notes framed, and these are hung upon the wall where the pictures should be.

In the drawing room is one frame that contains a bank note for $100,000, and he says: "There is the money in case I find a picture which is sufficiently valuable to pay that price for it. Meanwhile the note tells its own tale and saves me from explaining to my visitors that this picture cost so much, as most other rich men do."

The chief pleasure of these collectors appears to arise not from the beauty of the work, but from the cost of it; then why not have checks or bank notes for a large sum hung on the walls, as I do? Besides, I find that it is much more interesting to my visitors, for most of them look long and carefully at the bank notes who would but glance at the work of art."

This eccentric man gave a dinner on the same principle. In the soup plates there was no soup, but sovereigns; for fish were served five-pound notes, for game checks and for sweets shares in a thriving company, and there was not a guest who did not enjoy this entertainment more than any he or she had ever before been present at.—London Truth.

Dean Swift on Spelling.

Dean Swift roundly denounced the poets of his day who had introduced the "barbarous custom of abbreviating words to fit them to the measure of their verses." Swift instances "drudg'd" and "disturb'd" as mortal offenses. The custom so introduced had begun to dominate prose. Another cause—borrowed, Swift suggested, from the clipping process—which he held had contributed to the maiming of the language, "is a foolish opinion advanced of late years that we ought to spell exactly as we speak; which, besides the obvious inconvenience of utterly destroying our etymology, would be a thing we should never see the end of."

Risks in Railway Journeys.

The idea that the man who goes on a railway journey takes his life in his hand and is rather more likely than not to meet with an untimely death at the first curve the train negotiates is scarcely borne out by the fact that the chances against any one passenger meeting his death on the railway are 36,000,000 to 1. This immunity from disaster reflects considerable credit upon the companies, but still more upon engine drivers and signalmen, whose skill and care are the main factors in the safety of the passenger.—London Court Journal.

Reason.

Reason, reason as much as you like, but beware of thinking that it answers to everything, suffices for everything, satisfies everything. This mother loses her child. Will reason comfort her? Does cool reason counsel the inspired poet, the heroic warrior, the lover? Reason guides but a small part of many, and that is the least interesting. The rest obey feeling, true or false, and passion, good or bad.

Taking Him Down.

"Crittick was pleased to say that my play had few equals as a bit of realism," remarked young De Riter.

"He said even more than that," said Pepprey.

"Indeed?"

"Yes," he added, "and positively no inferiors."—Exchange.

Carelessness Somewhere.

Gladys—Mamma can't see anybody today. She's upstairs with the new baby. You see, they sent her a girl when she'd ordered a boy, and she's so disappointed she's sick.—Puck.

The Tide Turning in Louisville.

According to a Louisville paper General Hays has very much the best of the situation in Louisville. It is claimed that the tide has turned very strongly in favor, in fact has become so pronounced the friends of his opponent, Mr. Hager, have become somewhat alarmed. A conference, it was alleged, was held Tuesday for the purpose of devising some plan whereby the current may be checked and turned in the direction of Mr. Hager, who has the support of the controlling influence in Louisville politics. It is intimated that every effort will be made to defeat Gen. Hays, and if it cannot be done any other way Gov. Beckham will be sacrificed, the politicians deeming the election of their candidate for Governor decidedly more important than the success of their candidate for United States Senator. If this is the way they look at it the chances of Gov. Beckham carrying Louisville have gone glimmering.

W. G. McClintock, of Millersburg, was upon a plea of guilty, assessed $100, the minimum fine, for a violation of the Inter State Commerce law by shipping a carload of sheep into Cincinnati a few of which were found to have the scab. This disease is difficult to detect and a microscope is often used as in this case to detect it. Mr. McClintock is one of our largest shippers of live stock, and no man stands higher in the estimation of our people than he, and it is useless for us to say he was unable to find these diseased sheep before purchasing them here, for his honesty and strict integrity would not allowed him to have shipped diseased stock to another State had he known it. Levy-Saloshin.

One of the prettiest home weddings ever witnessed in Paris was that which culminated a romance of love at first sight between Miss Rose Saloshin, the handsome daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Saloshin, of this city, and Mr. Sim B. Levy, a prominent young business man of Louisville. The ceremony took place in the handsomely furnished parlor of the bride's home on Pleasant street, and was performed by Rabbi Goldenson, of Lexington. The parlor was tastefully decorated in ferns and palms, and wax tapers shed a soft mellow glow throughout the darkened room. During the ceremony the wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Esther Margolin on the violin, accompanied by Miss Sallie Daniel on the piano.

The bride entered on the arm of her father and was joined by her bridesmaid, Miss Margolin. She was met by the groom accompanied by his best man, Mr. Sidney Levy, of Louisville. Miss Saloshin looked lovely in a costume of pink pastelle broadcloth cut Princess style. She wore a white picture hat with gloves to match and white shoes, and carried a large bouquet of bride's roses. The groom looked handsome in a black Tuxedo.

After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner in seven courses was served. The table was decorated with cut flowers, the color scheme being pink and white. The health of the young couple was drank in champagne, and Miss Birdie Wollstein sweetly sang two selections, "Because" and "The Violet."

Mr. and Mrs. Levy were the recipients of a large number of very handsome and costly presents, many of them coming from a distance.

The young couple left on the 3:30 L. & N. train for Cincinnati, where they will spend a few days, and then go to Louisville to visit the groom's relatives. They will then make an extended trip to Iowa and other Western points, and on their return will go to housekeeping in Louisville.

Mr. Levy has secured for his life partner one of the prettiest and most popular young ladies in Paris, and every one wish them a long and happy married life.

Levy-Saloshin.

One of the prettiest home weddings ever witnessed in Paris was that which culminated a romance of love at first sight between Miss Rose Saloshin, the handsome daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Saloshin, of this city, and Mr. Sim B. Levy, a prominent young business man of Louisville. The ceremony took place in the handsomely furnished parlor of the bride's home on Pleasant street, and was performed by Rabbi Goldenson, of Lexington. The parlor was tastefully decorated in ferns and palms, and wax tapers shed a soft mellow glow throughout the darkened room. During the ceremony the wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Esther Margolin on the violin, accompanied by Miss Sallie Daniel on the piano.

The bride entered on the arm of her father and was joined by her bridesmaid, Miss Margolin. She was met by the groom accompanied by his best man, Mr. Sidney Levy, of Louisville. Miss Saloshin looked lovely in a costume of pink pastelle broadcloth cut Princess style. She wore a white picture hat with gloves to match and white shoes, and carried a large bouquet of bride's roses. The groom looked handsome in a black Tuxedo.

After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner in seven courses was served. The table was decorated with cut flowers, the color scheme being pink and white. The health of the young couple was drunk in champagne, and Miss Birdie Wollstein sweetly sang two selections, "Because" and "The Violet."

Mr. and Mrs. Levy were the recipients of a large number of very handsome and costly presents, many of them coming from a distance.

The young couple left on the 3:30 L. & N. train for Cincinnati, where they will spend a few days, and then go to Louisville to visit the groom's relatives. They will then make an extended trip to Iowa and other Western points, and on their return will go to housekeeping in Louisville.

Mr. Levy has secured for his life partner one of the prettiest and most popular young ladies in Paris, and every one wish them a long and happy married life.

Just Miss June

By Virginia Leila Wentz.

Summer after summer the same elderly quiet people had come to Mrs. Austin's pretty country boarding house, and the same noisy, vehement children. Of course there had been some additions to the latter class, some defections from the former, but the character of the company had remained much the same. This year, however, came a new boarder of a distinctly different element. He was Paul Campbell, a playwright of some reputation.

Being the only eligible man on the place, Miss Austin had managed to lay hold of Mr. Campbell as her especial property. At first he did not mind. Were not her eyes sufficiently blue? Was there not always about her the odor of orris and heliotrope? But when he discovered that both mother and daughter were trying to work the matrimonial game upon him he balked.

One warm day they had been down to the lake boating, and now they had turned their faces homeward.

"If you find the path rough for fashionable heels or tear your gown with the brambles or scratch your face with the wild rosebushes, on your head be the consequence," Paul Campbell was warning Miss Austin, who had capriciously chosen a path through the woods, while he had wisely indicated another.

"I don't care. It's too hot to breathe today, and I know this is the shorter way. I'll get us home more quickly than the other."

"Well, it must be single file," observed Campbell, with something like positive relief, remembering that the arrangement would do something to add to the difficulty of conversation.

"You'll have a good opportunity," threw back Miss Austin over her shoulder, "of determining whether my hair is all my own."

"Its glory," answered Campbell, quick always in saying the required thing, "must blind me to its defects, if there be any."

"So good of you to make the qualification," retorted Miss Austin.

Here and there the briar roses bloomed in all their exquisite pinkness. Campbell absently broke off a spray. Absently, too, he pulled the leaves from the stalk. Then he glanced to look upon the pink bud.

With a whimsical, half tender gesture he thrust it into his buttonhole. Oh, he was a fool, beyond doubt, to fancy such a connection. But those unostentatious little petals, showing their delicate veins as they tapered upward and infolding so much wild sweetness, reminded him of Miss June.

June was Mrs. Austin's younger daughter. She had wide, dark eyes and teeth of pearl, but she was not beautiful, like her sister Jane. Their names, in fact, many of the boarders thought, ought to have been turned about, for June was just like her sister's name, while Jane was as finished and jubilant as summer's first month. "There's a pleasure as well as a credit in dressing her," June had once overheard her mother say when she'd slipped Jane into a thin white frock and brushed her glossy curls. That was twelve years ago. June was only six, but her fragile little hands had gone together in mute protest, and her eyes had grown larger with half understood pain.

June, whom her household and the summer boarders saw; June of the infrequent speech, the shy, fugitive smiles and proud, reticent air—that was not June of the woods whom Paul Campbell had grown to know. June of the woods had an elusive grace, shining eyes, laughter as silvery as the rippling streams, exquisite fancies, quick, dramatic gestures and withal a delicate, childish abandon of spirit.

"Well," asked Miss Austin as they came but from the woodland path on to the sunny road, "have you settled the affairs of the nation? I looked back at you once or twice, but you were in such a brown study you didn't notice me," she pointed.

"Miss June, how could that be possible?" mocked he courteously.

"Pshaw!" she said, twirling her sunshade indignantly. "I believe I'm nothing but a peg for you to hang compliments on!"

"You are the magnet which attracts them," he corrected. Suddenly Miss Austin lifted her eyes.

"That wild rose bud in your coat is very pretty. Will you give it to me for a remembrance of the day?"

Campbell's fingers closed upon the bud to detach it; then he remembered. "No, Miss Austin," he laughed, thrusting his hands into his pockets; "it would be inappropriate. When I go to the village tomorrow I'll get you some roses from the florist's."

One morning several days later they were in the woods together, June and he, under the silver column of a beech tree. She sat beside him, with her slim, brown hands folded in her lap and the wild rose buds withering in her dark hair. The pink of them had somehow stolen to her cheeks. She was happy today in spite of the fact that Campbell was chiding her.

"See here, young lady," he was saying half seriously, half playfully, "if you continue to evade me as you've been doing for the past few days I'm going to pack up my trunk and leave next week. What possible pleasure do you think I find in a lot of staid ladies who knit on the porches and children who squabble?"

"There, June," suggested the girl contemner, watching the flash of a bird through a rift in the foliage. "She likes to be with you, Mr. Campbell. I'm sure. And I'm sure"—here the pearly teeth caught the scarlet underlip—"June's neither a staid knitting lady nor a squabbling child. And why should you miss me? I'm not beautiful like Jane. I'm just—"

"Just Miss June," finished Campbell simply. But there was a world of quiet pride in his voice.

June trembled beneath his words and knew not why she trembled. But there was sufficient dramatic force in her to go toward the making of a great actress. She spied a spray of scarlet columbine on a gray rock overhanging a dark pool. Unconsciously the contrast of colors struck her artistic eye, and she made use of it all to hide her sudden emotion.

"Will you fetch me those columbines that wave from the rock and throw colored patches on the pool, Mr. Campbell?" said she quietly.

But when he had gone her hand went for support to the column of the beech, her bosom rose and fell and her wide eyes dilated, then half closed.

"Oh, dear God," she prayed inwardly. "I've never had any one in my whole life really to love me. And he is so big and so knightly. Don't let me imagine a vain thing that would break my heart. Let me remember that I am plain—and that he is just kind."

"Here," cried Campbell cheerfully, coming back with a bunch of the columbine and handing it to her. "The scarlet just matches your lips, little maid." It was not alone her lips that were scarlet now; a flame spread hotly over her cheeks.

In a few moments she jumped up, laughing, smoothing out her blue gingham frock. "If ever I come to regard myself as a bewitching fairy princess I'll hold you responsible, sir. But I must be going now. I'm still Cinderella," she added. "I promised mother to make the salad dressing for luncheon."

And so the fragrant summer month drifted irresponsibly on.

One warm evening when the air was filled with the gold of fireflies, a maze of spangles, now darkening, now brightening, Mrs. Austin came out on her side porch, which, for a wonder, was vacant, and swung her portly weight none too gently into the hammock. The silver of the moon was beginning to tremble through the leaves of the trees and to show patches of the garden path that wound toward the front gate.

"Those loust sound awfully shrill," thought Mrs. Austin, trying ineffectually to put the hammock in motion. Then she lay there inert, yielding to the drowsiness of the air.

She must have dozed off a bit, for suddenly she started as is the way of one who tries to capture one's waking wits.

"And you know, dear, that I love you. I guess I've been loving you right from the first, but I didn't realize it till—"

Two figures had just passed the moonlit path in the path and were emerging into the shadows that stretched toward the gate, so Mrs. Austin couldn't exactly see who they were, but she recognized Campbell's rich, deep voice.

"At last!" she cried, smiling broadly. "Well, Jane deserved it—and she'll have a good husband." She raised herself up in the hammock. Sleep had fled.

Now, just at that moment Sarah, the cook, who had been buying some ribbon and rushing in one of the village shops, happened to enter the front gate. As she came abreast of the wide porch Mrs. Austin leaned over the railing.

"Sarah," she whispered, with maternal pride in her voice, "was that Miss Jane who went out of the gate then with Mr. Campbell?" It was a statement rather than a question.

"No'm," said Sarah, looking up quickly; "that wasn't Miss Jane, ma'am; it was just Miss June."

Catalogue of Misnomers.

"A silver shoehorn is a misnomer," said a philologist. "So is a wooden malletstone. So is a steel pen."

"A shoehorn is a piece of horn, according to its name. How can it be made of silver, then? In like manner a malletstone can't be made of wood—though they have them, the same as nutmegs in Connecticut—nor can a pen, which strictly means a feather, be made of steel."

"Irish stew is a dish unknown in Ireland. Jerusalem artichokes were never heard of in Jerusalem. Prussian blue does not come from Prussia, but from the red prussiate of potash."

"Galvanized iron is not galvanized. It is zinc coated. Catgut is not the gut of cats, but of sheep. Kid gloves do not come from kid skins, but from lamb skins."

"Sealing wax has no wax in it, nor is it a byproduct of the seal. Wormwood bears no relation either to wood or worms. Rice paper is never made from rice. Salt is not a salt."

"Copper coins are bronze, not copper. India ink is unknown in India. Turkeys come from our own country, from Turkey never."

A Lazy Poet.

Laziness does not always confer the long life claimed for it by Dr. Herbert Snow. Of proverbial laziness was Thomson, the poet, drowsing away the greater part of his life in his garden at Richmond, listening to nightingales, writing the interminable poems that everybody now admires and nobody reads. There he could often be seen standing eating the peaches off the trees, "with his hands in his pockets." Such an instance of indolence would be hard to beat and should, one would think, have added at least ten years to his life. But Thomson died at forty-eight. —London Chronicle.

MAHOGANY.

The Way This Beautiful Wood Was Brought Into Fashion.

Every one knows how effective and handsome mahogany is when used for good furniture, but few of us know how its value was first discovered.

In the latter part of the seventeenth century a London physician had a brother engaged in trade with the West Indies who on one occasion brought home several logs of mahogany as ballast. The doctor was building a house, and his brother suggested that the logs would serve for ceiling beams. Acting on the proposal, the doctor gave orders to the workmen to make use of the mahogany, but their tools were not equal to the task of cutting the hard wood, and the logs were put out of the way in a corner in the garden.

Some time afterward the head carpenter tried to make a box from the wood, but was unsuccessful with ordinary tools. He told the doctor, who was interested in the baffling timber and ordered heavier tools to be made to work it with, says Home Notes. When this was done and a box at last made and polished, it was so handsome that a bureau was made from another of the despised logs, and this was declared by experts to be so superior to other furniture making woods that the craze for mahogany set in, and furniture made from it became highly popular. The then Duchess of Buckingham fostering the craze in the fashionable world.

A Sea Serpent Identified.

Some forty years ago, when out with a boating party for seagull shooting, I espied a monster fish basking on the surface of the water, with its head well up in the air. The creature allowed us to get within thirty yards, when I sent two charges of shot into its head, with the result that it rolled over on its back, and our boat soon came up to it. It proved to be a large angel shark. I thought I would make quite sure it was dead and sent two more charges into its upturned belly. I must have, unfortunately, burst its air bladder, for it began slowly to sink. Had I not killed it at first, and had it reared its head and flapped its wings, we should probably have added one more story to the long list of sea serpent fabrications. —Manchester Courier.

The Forgetful Saurian.

A colored preacher took some candidates for immersion down to a river in Louisiana. Seeing some alligators in the stream, one of them objected. "Why, brother," urged the pastor, "can't you trust the Lord? He took care of Jonah, didn't he?"

"Y-a-a-s," admitted the ducky, "but a whale's different. A whale's got a meen'y, but of one o' dem 'gators waster swaller dis nigger, he'd jes' go ter sleep dar in de sun an' fergit all 'bout me." —Woman's Home Companion.

MUST LOOK YOUNG.

This Accounts For Dyed Locks That Nurses Sometimes Show.

"Yes, she's a good nurse, doctor," said the patient rather reluctantly. "You don't mean that," was the answer of the physician. "What's the matter with her? Come, tell me."

"Nothing," began the faint contradiction. "She's quiet, tidy and sympathetic, but, doctor, her hair's dyed. I could see it plainly yesterday when she sat between me and the window."

The doctor did not speak for a moment. He did not even look surprised. "Such a nice nurse, too," went on the patient. "Why should she do such a foolish thing?"

It was then that she learned from the doctor that dyed hair is not nearly so uncommon in the case of trained nurses as might be supposed. Sick people like to have young nurses about them. Even physicians have a weakness for the young nurses. They believe that their interest and enthusiasm are greater.

"The nurses' term of usefulness is short enough as it is," this physician said, "for the work is so exhaustive that they must soon succumb. Some of them are compelled to give up after ten years. Few are over able to keep up until they have put in twenty years."

"If they feel that gray hairs, coming perhaps a little earlier than they are due, are going to make the term of their best days even briefer they are driven to hiding those traces of time and overwork by the use of hair dye, and the number that do make use of it is very much larger than anybody supposes." —New York Sun.

Butterflies That Live on Fish.

The butterfly was blue and transparent. As through blue glass its tiny heart could be seen beating inside its body, and the professor read a newspaper article through its lovely blue wings. "This," he said, "is the pteropoda, a Mediterranean butterfly. It eats fish. On its tongue are rows of pointed hooks. They serve as teeth. This beautiful creature would turn up its nose at a garden of roses and lilies, but it would feast ecstatically upon a putrid eel. Now and then a pteropoda is found on the Florida or the California coast. It is only abundant, though, in the Mediterranean."

The Power of Intuition.

"The power of intuition usually spoken of as being so mysterious is really not so at all," said a woman recently. "It is merely the ordinary method of reasoning from observation intensified. The so called intuitive person differs from the one of more commonplace powers in possessing a keener sensitiveness to facts. She or he, for it is absurd to assert that this power is exclusively feminine, observes a thousand things that persons of duller sense fail to see and that are beyond the control of the most skillful actor." —New York Tribune.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. ZOROASTRIANS OF PERSIA.

They are a Much Persecuted and Unjustly Judged People.

Zoroaster, the prophet of ancient Iran, arose about the middle of the seventh century before Christ as a reformer of the older creed of Persia, a primitive form of nature worship which had become debased through corruption and crass superstition. His birthplace is believed to have been in the province of Azarbaijan, to the west of the Caspian sea, a region abounding in volcanic mountains, hot springs, naphtha wells and other igneous phenomena. By inheritance he was a member of the sacerdotal tribe of the Magi and by calling a forerunner of the wise men from the east who worshipped centuries later at the cradle in Bethlehem. Inspired by ecstatic visions of heaven and warned by prophetic signs of the terrors of hell, he came to teach his people the ethical meaning of the conflict between good and evil under the form of Ormazd and Ahriman as god and devil. Filled with the hope of an eternal existence after the general resurrection of the dead, he sought to lead his followers to a more spiritual life and to teach them the moral significance of the motto of his faith, "Good thoughts, good words, good deeds," and to guide them also in practical ways, inculcating the practice of agriculture, kindness to animals, especially the cow, habits of thrift and industry, together with those of bodily cleanliness and the observance of certain rites and ceremonies in their daily life. His death is thought to have occurred at Balkh, in eastern Iran, about 583 B. C., during the religious war between Iran and Turan, which was called forth by his teaching.

Zoroaster's creed became the religion of an eastern world empire. The law of the Medes and Persians, which knew no change, molded the history of the early kingdom of Iran, and the same decrees prevailed in Bactria. It was by Ormazd's will that the sovereign rulers of these lands held sway, kings by divine right. Cyrus the Great is called the Lord's "anointed" and his "shepherd" even in the Bible, and "king by the grace of Anramazda" was Darius' own proud claim. The inscriptions and the Avesta alike exalt the sacred majesty of the king. But many of those who once were kings of Zoroaster's line are now known only by name. Persia is Mohammedan, the Persians are Mussulmans by faith, and Islam has blotted out much of the ancient history and creed. The Zoroastrians of Persia, stigmatized as Gahabars, number not more than 10,000 souls. Yazd is the home of about 8,000 of these. Kerman, a smaller city to the southeast, claims about 2,000 more. Teheran, the capital, near where Zoroaster's mother is said to have been born, has less than 300. Shiraz numbers not fifty of the ancient belief. In Isfahan a half dozen and some of the minor towns can each add three or four more to make up the talemans' count. Frowned upon as "fire worshippers," which they really are not, despised or persecuted as infidels, surrounded by business restrictions and social disabilities, the "Jews of the east," as they are sometimes called, maintain their lives at high cost. And yet they possess admirable qualities, and it is these characteristics that have preserved their religion from being utterly effaced. Through ages of misfortune and distress they have remained true to it, and by their sterling traits of truth, uprightness, generosity and devotion they still exemplify what was best in it.—A. V. Williams Jackson in Century.

Justice of Inequality.

The eastern tale is generally a compound of that humor, simplicity and imagination that we associate, rightly or wrongly, with the Irishman, just because Ireland is the nearest country to our own that is not aggressively Saxon. What could be more Irish, for instance, than the behavior of the great Turkish hero of so many stories, Nasreddin Hodja, when a neighbor came to borrow his donkey. "My donkey is not here," he said. The words were scarcely out of his mouth when the animal brayed loudly. "But your donkey is here; I can hear him," cried the neighbor. "What?" shouted the enraged Turk. "Do you mean to say you believe my donkey before you believe me?"

Wit in the east, as elsewhere, is nothing without its accompanying quality of insight to turn it into exquisite humor, and Nasreddin Hodja showed himself at his best when asked to divide a bag of nuts among the assembled company. He gave five to one, twenty to another, two to another, and so on, until he was asked in astonishment why he divided them in such a manner. "I am doing it as God would," he answered, with a smile.—London Chronicle.

Striking Clocks.

The salesman in the jewelry store was talking of the merits of various wall clocks to a patron and finally pointed out one as a great bargain. "Not for me," interrupted the customer; "that clock strikes, and I wouldn't have it as a gift." "You're different from the usual run of purchasers; they prefer striking clocks," commented the salesman. "Yes, but they don't keep billiard rooms," explained the customer. "I want the clock for my establishment, and a striking clock would lose me money. Pool and billiards are fascinating games and players get so absorbed they forget all about time, which they wouldn't do if there was a clock striking regularly. A clock striking every hour in my place would make a big hole in the receipts, and I guess a clock that struck half hours would put me out of business. No, sir; you don't find a wise pool room keeper hanging a striking clock in his place."

WAMPUM.

What It Is and How the Indians Used to Make It.

When Columbus discovered America he found the Indians carrying on trade from tribe to tribe with wampum. Anything that has value may be used as money. In ancient Syracuse and Britain tin was used as money, and we find that iron was so used at one time in Sparta, pieces of silk in China, cattle in Rome and Germany, leather among the Carthaginians, nails in Scotland, lead in Burma, platinum in Russia, cubes of pressed tea in Tartary, slaves among the Anglo-Saxons, salt in Abyssinia, etc.

Wampum is from an Algonquin word meaning "white." The Indians have ever been fond of ornaments, particularly of beads. They used to make beads of seashells in the following way: A fragment of stone was with much care "worked down" to the size of a small nail, having one end quite pointed, and it was then fastened to a piece of cane or a reed. With this simple tool the Indian workman chipped off a bit of the inside of a conch shell or a part of the shell of a hard clam and rubbed it down to the size desired. This bit of shell he held in his hand, placed the sharp end of the stone against it and then turned the stone around and around until a hole was drilled entirely through the shell.

The shell beads thus tediously manufactured were called wampum. These beads were either white or of a purple color, the last being valued much higher than the first. It was the very laborious way of making wampum that gave it value. The wampum was artistically strung upon hempen threads and used as necklaces, bracelets and rings. Often it was woven into belts about three inches in width and two feet in length.

The wampum belt served many purposes. It was sent from tribe to tribe with solemn promises and messages, it was used in making peace, in asking for aid in time of war, for personal adornment and also as a "circulating medium." The coast tribe Indians were the wampum makers. The interior Indians spent their time hunting and exchanging game of all kinds for the wampum made by the coast tribes. For a long time after white people had settled in the new world small coins were scarce and wampum was used as change. Finally the palefaces set up lathes by treadles for the purpose of making wampum quickly, and soon the Indian wampum makers were, as we say nowadays, "out of a job."

Early English Bookbindings.

During the reign of Elizabeth the fashion in bookbinding underwent a considerable change, the graceful simplicity of the early work, with its rather severe and restrained ornament, giving place to a heavy, overdecorated style, in which a superabundance of gilding hid poverty of design. This style reached its height in the bindings produced for James I., which were commonly dotted all over with flowers-de-luce or thistles, while the corners were filled with a heavy block of coarse design. During the reign of Charles the bindings were, as a rule, copied from French work, and the designs carried out with very small tools; but, though foreign influence was strongly felt at first, the English binders soon struck out a line of their own, and Samuel Mearne, the binder to Charles II., produced some admirable work and seems to have introduced the quaintly shaped panel which gave the name of cottage binding to a certain class of work. At a little later date an Edinburgh binder, whose name is unknown, but whose work is easily distinguishable, executed some marvelous pieces of work on very dark green morocco.

Monotonous.

A well known physician once told a patient who he suspected was receiving too many calls from solicitous friends to make a stroke with a pencil on a piece of paper every time he was asked, "How are you today?" The result for one day was just twenty-four strokes, and the physician immediately gave strict orders that no visitor should be permitted to enter the sick-room until further notice, remarking to the nurse that if his patient must be worried to death there was at least no reason why it should be done in such an unscientific manner. Only those who have suffered serious illness know how trying it is to be required to answer again and again the same question asked by one well meaning individual after another. It would matter less if visitors contented themselves with asking just one question, but they do not, and the minute details of one's ailments become peculiarly depressing after a few repetitions. Many people forget that rest and quiet are often invaluable agents in securing restoration to health.

Chinese Gardens.

In the ornamenting and beautifying of gardens the Chinese excel over all other nations. By means of a variety of winding walks they make a small place appear twice as large as it really is. Innumerable flowerpots, containing a great variety of beautiful asters, of which they are very fond, are sometimes arranged in a labyrinth, from which you cannot get out again without a guide. They seem to have a very extensive assortment of asters; one species is quite white, as large as a rose, with long graceful leaves, which the Chinese use in the season for salad, justly esteeming them a very great delicacy. When the asters are all in full bloom, the pots arranged hand-somely near a piece of water and the walks and alleys well lighted at night with variously colored lamps, a Chinese garden has the appearance of one of those enchanted palaces we read of in the Arabian tales.

A FOOLISH PLAN

It's a joy to eat—I welcome my dinner hour; Because I rout indigestion with August Flower!
Constipation is the result of indigestion, biliousness, flatulency, loss of appetite, self-poisoning, anemia, emaciation, uric acid, neuralgia in various parts of the system, catarrhal inflammation of the intestinal canal and numerous other ailments that rob life of its pleasures if they do not finally rob you of life itself.
"I'm bound in the bowels," is a common expression of people who look miserable and are miserable—yet who persist in "letting nature take its course."
What a foolish plan, when nature could be aided by the use of Green's August Flower, which is nature's own remedy for constipation and all stomach ills.
August Flower gives new life to the liver and insures healthy stools.

In Electric Bitters, however, I found a cure, and by them was restored to perfect health. I recommend this great tonic medicine to all with weak kidneys, liver or stomach." Our Washington Letter.

BY EARL W. MAYO.

WASHINGTON, October 8. — The capital this week is given over to bright bunting, brass buttons, and blue blouses, and everywhere are the smiling faces of the men who fought in the swamps of Cuba or in the jungles of Luzon, who were with Dewey at Manila Bay or with Schley at Santiago. The hotels and boarding houses are crowded with visitors, here to attend the third annual encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans. There are delegates from every part of the Union—North, South, East and West are alike represented not only by the veterans themselves, but by the various ladies' auxiliaries. The ladies, of whom there are fully a thousand, are very much in evidence, being distinguished from the native daughters by the resplendent badges which they wear in great profusion. They have had a strenuous time this week with their parades, their business meetings, elections, banquets, receptions, and the like; on Tuesday they paraded Pennsylvania avenue from the Capitol to the White House and back, on Wednesday were received at the White House by the President, on Thursday were tendered a banquet at Willard's, the rest of their time being filled in with attendance of the convention's sessions, numerous smaller receptions by local patriotic societies, and in sight-seeing. About the first business they transacted was the drafting of resolutions, unanimously adopted, for the continuance of the army canteen, and their legislative committee was instructed to present these resolutions to Congress at its next session. Captain Hamilton Ward, of Buffalo, N. Y., was elected commander-in-chief by acclamation, the other nominees for the office withdrawing from the contest when it was seen that Captain Ward's choice was certain. The membership of the association was increased by some 4,000 names when the Legion of Spanish War Veterans of Massachusetts and New Hampshire was taken over by the parent body on the ratification of its charter by the New Englanders.

Not to be behind the times in the adaptation of the horseless carriages to the needs of the army, and abreast of the experiments which have recently been conducted in various European countries, at least one American has been at work in an effort to widen the field of usefulness of the automobile in wartime. There is on exhibition here this week a machine constructed entirely of steel, except the solid rubber tires, and surmounted by a slender, though none the less effective and modern, rapid fire guns. In perfecting his adaptation of this now familiar vehicle to the needs of the military, the inventor has made a radical departure from the types which have of late been tried in Germany and Austria, for instance, in that he has made no provision in the way of armor for the protection of the chauffeur, the gunner, and assistant gunner. However, this lessening of the total weight will give him much greater speed, and in other ways his car is even stronger and better fitted to withstand the rough service than those put forward across the pond. Until very recently American and English inventors have confined their efforts to providing an easy-riding auto-ambulance, but this last invention seems to be a long step in the direction of securing a safe and rapid means of transmitting dispatches and doing scouting work, which heretofore has been done by the cavalry.

If straws show which way the wind blows, it seems more than likely that the next or some near succeeding session of Congress will have presented for its consideration the question of the imposition of an income tax, or some sort of a government take-off on private fortunes. Everything that the President has said in recent public addresses lends color to the growing belief that he will embody such a suggestion in one of his messages to Congress before his term expires. Of course, before Congress could or would formulate a bill to provide such a tax, the matter would have to be passed on by the Supreme Court. However, with a possible two of the five necessary votes assured—there being the likelihood that he will have the opportunity to fill that number of vacancies with men supposedly acquiescing in his views—it would not seem a hard matter for the President to obtain a favorable decision from the highest tribunal in the land. The last decision of the court on the constitutionality of the income tax, the vote was 5 to 4 against it, and the wave of disappointment which seemed to sweep the country is pointed to by those who believed that the President will raise the point again in the near future as an indication that he will have the support of public opinion in his effort to incorporate in the nation's statute books his theories in his new field of economics.

Much Beloved at His Home.

Business was suspended at Cartersville, Ga., the home of the late Rev. Sam P. Jones, when the body of the evangelist reached there Tuesday. The City Council and about 3,000 persons met the body at the station. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon and the body taken to Atlanta, where it will lie in state in the capitol Friday. It will then be taken back to Cartersville for interment.

DIED SUDDENLY OF HEART DISEASE

How frequently does a head line similar to the above greet us in the newspapers. The rush, push and strenuousness of the American people has a strong tendency to lead up to valvular and other affections of the heart, attended by irregular action, palpitation, dizziness, smothered sensations and other distressing symptoms.

Three of the prominent ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made are recommended by some of the leading writers on Materia Medica for the cure of just such cases. Golden Seal root, for instance, is said by the UNITED STATES DISPENSARY, a standard authority, "to impart tone and increased power to the heart's action." Numerous other leading authorities represent Golden Seal as an unsurpassed tonic for the muscular system in general, and as the heart is almost wholly composed of muscular tissue, it naturally follows that it must be greatly strengthened by this superb, general tonic. But probably the most important ingredient of "Golden Medical Discovery," so far as its marvelous cures of valvular and other affections of the heart are concerned, is Stone root, or Collinsonia Can., Prof. Wm. Paine, author of Paine's Epitome of Medicine, says of it:

"I, not long since, had a patient who was so much oppressed with valvular disease of the heart that his friends were obliged to carry him up-stairs. He, however, gradually recovered under the influence of Collinsonia (medicinal principle extracted from Stone root), and is now attending to his business. Heretofore physicians knew of no remedy for the removal of so distressing and dangerous a malady. With them it was all guess-work, and it fearfully warned the afflicted that death was near at hand. Collinsonia unquestionably affords relief in such cases, and in most instances effects a cure."

Stone root is also recommended by Drs. Hale and Ellingwood, of Chicago, for valvular and other diseases of the heart. The latter says: "It is a heart tonic of direct and permanent influence." "Golden Medical Discovery," not only cures serious heart affections, but is a most efficient general tonic and invigorator, strengthening the stomach, invigorating the liver, regulating the bowels and curing catarrhal affections in all parts of the system.
